

Weights and Measures

Weigh more value for small producers in Tanzania

You can't do your job properly without the right tools. We continue to believe in our farmers, and continue to invest in our relationships with them in order to improve their livelihoods, and improve your coffee.

These new weighing scales allow them to do more of the process in their village, adding more value to their crop. In the past we have invested in pulpers for the same reason, and now when they have dried and sorted the beans they can bag and weigh them ready to go to town for the final milling.

EA have bought seven scales, and the necessary government calibration certificates for the seven villages in Mweka, Kilimanjaro.

When Ian visits later this year we'll make sure he weighs something and sends us all a photo!

Measuring our impact on the environment

One of our passions at home and overseas has always been to find affordable and practical ways to minimise our environmental impact and reduce single-use plastics.

As you may know we already do a lot, but recently we've been able to do more, and have some further creative ideas in the pipeline.

You can read a lot online about the overseas work on forest preservation, and water reduction.

But for EA in the UK here's a reminder of what we do, and some new ideas:

- > all take-out supplies are plastic-free, compostable / biodegradable
- > re-use packaging where possible
- > return packaging to suppliers for re-use e.g. polystyrene

- > courier service soon to use paper labels instead of plastic windows
- > packing tape switching to kraft paper not plastic
- > bulk paper sack option to reduce packaging on coffee
- > new trial soon of re-usable containers = zero packaging
- > in discussion with waste company about better recycling and zero landfill options

If you have more ideas for us, even better . . . please share.

New coffee bags

Looking oh so good!

Our new stand-up pouches available now for all coffees:

- > kraft paper outer
- > one-way valve for freshness
- > ziplock resealable strip
- > new labels

But same great coffee of course.

Someone stole my coffee cup today. I'm just off to the police station to look at a few mug shots 😊

Happerley Gold

A true check on provenance and transparency of the supply process, we are pleased to have been awarded the GOLD STANDARD
